

Employers who want YOU

When looking for a job, the best place to start is with companies that are looking for you.

Many companies are now actively seeking to make their workforce more representative of the rich mixture of cultures and backgrounds in Canada today.

Employers in the public and private sector realize that hiring people of various cultures is not only the fair thing to do, but it makes great business sense.

Businesses are finding they are better able to understand and relate with their increasingly diversified customer base if their own employees come from that diversified pool. They also benefit from the injection of new ideas and new perspectives the employees from differing backgrounds can provide.

Several larger companies that are regulated by or do business with the federal government are required by Canada's Employment Equity legislation to hire jobseekers from groups that have traditionally been under-represented in the workforce. These groups include visible minorities, Aboriginal peoples, women and people with disabilities.

According to Statistics Canada, if current immigration rates continue, it is possible that immigration could account for virtually all labour force growth by 2011.

Additionally, the Aboriginal community, with just over half its population under 25 years old, is the fastest growing demographic group in Canada, and will play a significant role in supplying Canada's labour force.

The DiversityCanada Foundation, publisher of this handbook, is a non-profit organisation which works to link jobseekers with employers looking to diversify. We do so through resources like this handbook and the directory you'll find in the following pages, and as well through our website, <http://DiversityCanada.com>.

DiversityCanada.com caters for jobseekers in traditionally under-represented groups. Into its third year online, the site provides users with a revolutionary new approach to finding jobs.

First, it features jobs from only employers who are equal opportunity employers and are seeking to hire people of diverse backgrounds and abilities. This way, you can be confident that every employer you find on our site has a welcome mat for you.

Second, the website DiversityCanada.com provides you with a real "jobs search engine", that is a site that functions like the popular search sites Google, Yahoo and MSN.

The difference is that when you enter a search term at DiversityCanada.com, the results will take you only to the websites of employers who are looking to diversify. There are never any irrelevant results from websites that have nothing to do with employment for Canadians.

Apart from searching jobs, you can post your resume at our website DiversityCanada.com so employers can find you. DiversityCanada has also linked up with its partner company, Maplejobs Inc (found online at <http://maplejobs.com>), to provide you with a free e-mail account which you can use to send out job applications. All services at DiversityCanada.com are free of charge to you.

Canada is changing. There are extraordinary opportunities today for anyone who wants to get ahead. Claim your place too.

Diversity at work is the wave of the future

The directory on the following pages provides you with a list of companies that fall under the Employment Equity Act (1995).

This law states that employers with 100 or more employees in federally-regulated industries (such as banking, communications, and international and inter-provincial transportation) must hire and promote workers from traditionally under-represented groups. (Also falling under the Act are federal departments and other parts of the public service, including the Canadian Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, although they are not included in this directory.)

The four groups specifically targeted in the legislation are visible minorities, Aboriginal peoples, women, and persons with disabilities.

These employers may call themselves Employment Equity Employers or Equal Opportunity Employers. They encourage members of the four targeted groups to apply for employment.

Employment Equity, however, is not about putting someone in a job solely because he or she is a member of an equity group. Nothing in the legislation forces any employer to hire unqualified persons. Those seeking employment must have the skills, training and aptitude to succeed in the available positions.

When looking for a job, start with the employers listed here. Visit their websites to discover more about them. You can also visit DiversityCanada.com, where the search engine will allow you to quickly research available jobs in your specific field of interest.

When you contact potential employers, please remember to tell them you came across them here, in DiversityCanada.com's Employers Want YOU career handbook.

PERSONAL PLANNER

Use the worksheets on these pages to help you identify where you want to go in your career and to keep you on track to achieving your goals. Visit www.DiversityCanada.com for more career planning resources.

My Career Path

1. Identify at least three skills or abilities you would most like to use in your work:

2. Describe the environment in which you would enjoy working:

---

3. Identify one of the major employment sectors in which you would like to work:

- Private       Government       Academic       Non-profit

4. Choose a specific geographical location as well as the size of organization you would prefer:

5. Identify when you want to start work and how much time you will devote to your job search:

---

Using the information above, write a career goals statement that defines the skills and abilities you want to use, the type of employer you would like to work for and when you want to achieve your immediate career goals:

---

---

My Circle Of Strength

Networking is a key part of the job search. Make a list of people you know. Contact them and let them know you are looking for a job. Ask them to let you know of anything that might suit you.
